Web 2 Platform Relationship

The relationships with network participants change from positive-sum to zero-sum.

Platform's relationship to users

Platform's to complements
(developers, creators, businesses)

Source: cdixon.org

Start: Positive Sum

At the beginning, platforms are willing to do everything to attract users and creators (demand and supply, respectively) to establish network effects. They often operate with substantial losses at this stage, subsidizing their products and services for users and promoting partnerships on exceptional terms for complementary third parties such as developers, creators, or companies.

Ending in zero-sum

Changes affect the participants: users and developers on the platforms. Historical examples of this are Microsoft vs. Netscape, Google vs. Yelp, Facebook vs. Zynga, and Twitter vs. its 3rd-party clients. We now have decades of evidence that doing so will end in disappointment. In addition, users give up privacy, control of their data, and become vulnerable to security breaches.

In Web 3, such relationship is deconstructed. Through 1OKTFshop and OthersideMeta 's first trip, we are using stories to co-develop the future of media. Through these aforementioned ecosystem collaboration, we co-operate to unlock the value of ownership economy.

Gucci has chosen to become part of 10ktf's quest. If collectively we have not purchased Gucci Grail, we will not get Gucci expansion. In Yuga's IP ecosystem map, each of us is co-developing the stories, co-shaping the culture.

Metaverse Content

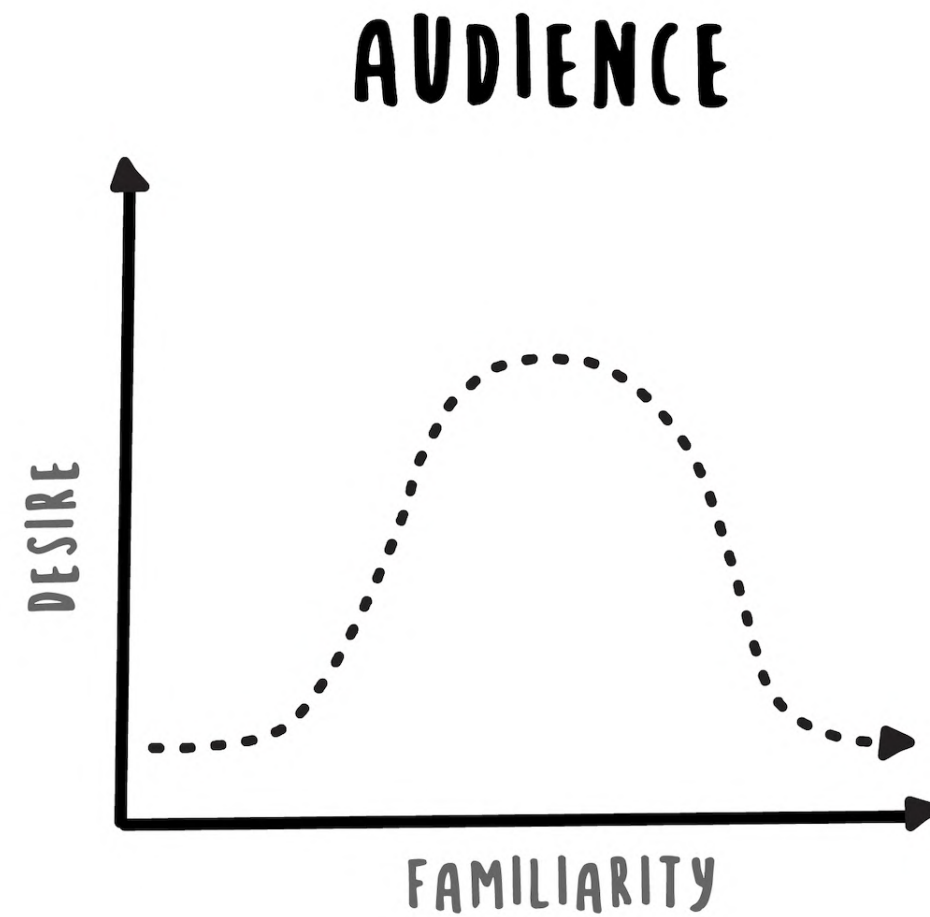

The challenge of building an audience as a creator is figuring out how to master something new while your audience grows a desire for what you create. These two usually go in different directions.

As a creator, learning something new can be filled with frustration and deadends. It's disheartening. It usually gets worse before it gets better. As we gain knowhow with time, our satisfaction also increases. Malcolm Gladwell said it takes 10,000 hours to master something.

Audiences on the other hand tend to ignore you until they become familiar with your work. Studies have found familiarity creates desire. It's limited though. After exposure of 8+ times people become less attracted to your creation.

How to tell a good story

If you start your learning curve slightly ahead of the audience, your satisfaction in the process will create momentum with the audience.

Timing is difficult, but consistency is more valuable.

FINDING HARMONY BETWEEN CREATOR AND AUDIENCE

Challenges

1/ Lack of web2 audience participation
Majority of them are in web3.

2/ Lack of ongoing utility

3/ Low frequency of purchase

Opportunities

1/ Attract web2 participants

2/ Create story-driven, utility driven roadmap

3/ Build products audience want. Make it fun.
